BYRON'S GRAVE.—A correspondent of the London Times calls attention to the worst that neglect to which the burial place of Lord Byron is subjected:—

"How many of the poet's admirers," he asks, "know where he is buried at all? At Hucknall Torkard, a few might answer, but could one in a hundred of all the thousands that have read his works, and his peculiarities, admired his genius, or blackened his memory, tell you where Hucknall Torkard is, what it is, or from personal observation give you any idea of its unvisited, out of the world dreariness and desolation."

"Some six miles from Nottingham, on the Mansfield line of railway, lies the miserable collection of cottages and small shops dignified by that name. Approaching it from Nottingham you pass one or two other small places as grimy and unpicturesque as itself, then comes a wide sandy tract of unenclosed land, covered here and there with stunted bushes and blackened furze, which is all that remains of what was once Sherwood Forest, and still bears that name, and at length the train stops near a stone's throw from the station, and consists mainly of one long, dirty, irregular lane, at the top of which is the church."

This edifice is a small, weather worn building, supposed to date from the eleventh century, and stands in a churchyard that reminds you of nothing but Arabia Petraea without the sun.
In a vault beneath the chancel, Lord Byron, his ancestors, and his daughter, Lady Lovelace, are buried. Buried, indeed! Shut out not only from the living world, but its very remembrance. More lonely, more forsaken by his fellow men in his death, than in the dark est moments of his self embittered life.

"Anything more at variance with the thoughts that crowd upon the mind while standing beside the resting place of genius than every surrounding of this forlorn grave is impossible to imagine. The miserable, poverty stricken village—the time worn church, to which none but some three or four of the Byrons seem ever to have been brought for burial save the very poor—the Byron pew, with its green baize lining faded and torn, now fallen into the hands of some decent sort of folks in the village, and above the plain white tablet, without ornament of outline or inscription, erected in memory of the author of 'Childe Harold' by Mrs. Leigh. She after all, it seems, of all his admirers so loud voiced in their praise, was and is the only one who, out of her scanty means, had more than words to offer as a tribute to his deathless fame. Like his own 'Manfred,' the 'Spirits' he has 'raised abandon him,' and he rests as he lived, alone."

DIFFICULTIES OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.
One evening, as a Frenchman was seated by a southern planter's fireside the Frenchman remarked that there was one English word of which he could never find the meaning; he had vainly searched the dictionaries and begged his friend to assist him to an explanation.
The word was often used by every one, and yet when he asked its meaning he was always told there was no such word, but he hoped better treatment from his present host, and at once, to test his powers, gave the word as "Tattle too!"

"Tattle too!" said his friend; "there is no such word."

"There it is!" cried the despairing Frenchman; "you are just like all the others, you say there is no such word, yet you always use it!"

"I cannot imagine what you mean," said his friend, "and am sure there is no such word."

The Frenchman sat a moment in lugubrious silence when it chanced that a servant entered with fuel for replenishing the fire. As he poked and stirred, and placed the fresh wood "There there," exclaimed the host, "that'll do it, that'll do it!"

"There! there!" cried the excited Frenchman, "you used the word this minute! Twice you told me 'Tattle too! tattle too! and yet you say there is no such word!" New Orleans Picayune.

LINCOLN AND SPEED.—Among other anecdotes, said to be new, that have just been furnished to the Independent, by a personal acquaintance of President Lincoln, is this:

One evening, during the last winter of the President's life, when extremely busy, and wary as well, he was called to the reception room to see Mr. Speed, then Attorney General. The latter had called to introduce a friend, and seeing the weary look of the President, and that he was very sorry," said Mr.
Speed, "very sorry Mr. President, to disturb you." "Speed," he replied, "you remind me of a story of Henry Ward Beecher. One Sunday, as he was going to preach, he saw some boys playing marbles on the street. He stopped and looked at them hard. 'Boys,' he said, presently, 'boys, I'm scared; scared.' 'Then why in the d—l don't you run?' answered the boys. 'If you are so sorry, Speed, why did you come?'"

HYMNIAL.—A rather ancient and unsophis-ticated couple were united in the holy bonds of wedlock at the office of Justice Shivers yesterday, the gentleman tottering under the burdens of some fifty summers, and the lady boasting some forty winters. They entered the office hand in hand, lovingly and endearingly. The attentive Squire inquired what he could do for them. "A good deal," responded the masculine. He then whispered to the magistrate's ear, "We want to marry." The license was produced and the ceremony performed promptly and fashionably. "What do I owe you?" inquired the happy groom. "I leave that with you," replied the scale-balancer. "Would five cents answer?" "Never received that little—a dollar will do." Groom borrowed a dollar from his wife—she exclaiming "that's three gone!" and the wain as one flesh vanished the rancho.—Columbus (Ga.) Enquirer.
